SEPTEMBER 2023

SUMMARY

The Burlington region reported 135 sales and 393 new listings in September, causing the sales-to-new listings ratio to decline to 34 per cent and inventories to rise over the last month. Despite inventory gains, levels remain relatively low for the area. Nonetheless, the shift in sales and inventory caused the months of supply to rise to nearly four months, the highest since 2008.

The unadjusted benchmark price trended down from August, reaching $1,045,600. Despite the monthly decline, prices are nearly five per cent higher than last September.

PROPERTY TYPES

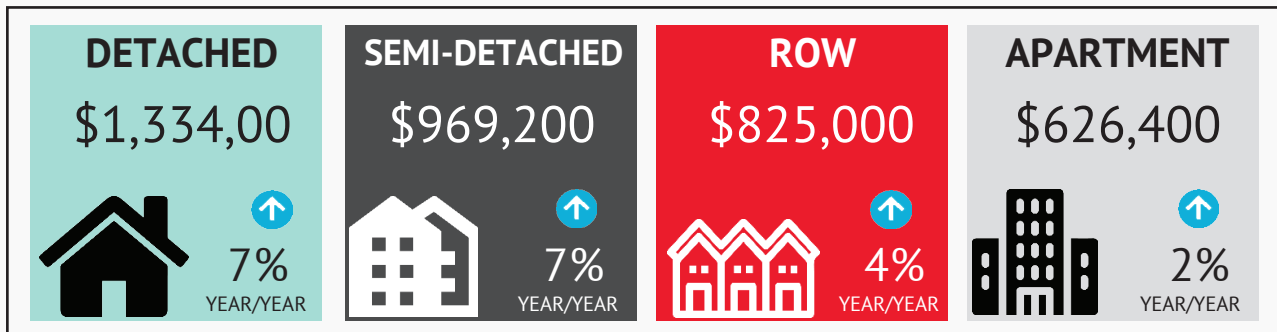

Both year-to-date sales and new listings reported a decline in detached, semi-detached and row-style properties across the region. Interestingly, apartment-style home sales remain higher than levels reported last year. However, they are all still trending under the long-term average.

Inventory levels improved in the detached sector, increasing supply months from 2.7 months in August to 4.8 months in September. Higher levels of supply compared to sales weighed on detached prices. The unadjusted benchmark price eased by nearly two per cent in the detached sector compared to last month but remained almost seven per cent higher than levels reported in the previous year. Row-style properties are the only property type where prices continue to rise over the previous month and last year's levels.

Months of Supply and Prices

REGIONAL SUMMARY

Year-to-date sales have eased across most regions in Burlington; the only areas to report gains were Burlington 30 and 36. Both regions also saw new listings improve or remain comparable to last year's levels. While inventory conditions varied across different areas, Burlington 30,33,34,36 and 38 all posted year-over-year inventory gains in September. The months of supply rose compared to last month and last year, weighing on prices across most areas. Benchmark prices trended down over the last month across all areas except Burlington 38.
