OCTOBER 2023

SUMMARY

Home sales slowed this October. A total of 408 units were sold, making it the slowest October reported since 2010. Year-to-date, sales have declined nearly 13 per cent. Declines have been driven by homes priced above $800,000. Keeping pace with the trend seen in most areas, the Hamilton Region saw a sharp rise in new listings. The sales to new listings ratio is relatively low at 33 per cent. This translates to increased supply, which is welcome news for buyers who now have more choice and flexibility in their homebuying decisions.

Fewer sales combined with increased inventory caused the months of supply to rise to nearly five months. The higher months of supply is weighing on home prices. In October, the benchmark price in Hamilton fell to $766,100, roughly four per cent lower than last month and over one per cent lower than last October. Prices currently align with those seen at the beginning of 2023.

PROPERTY TYPES

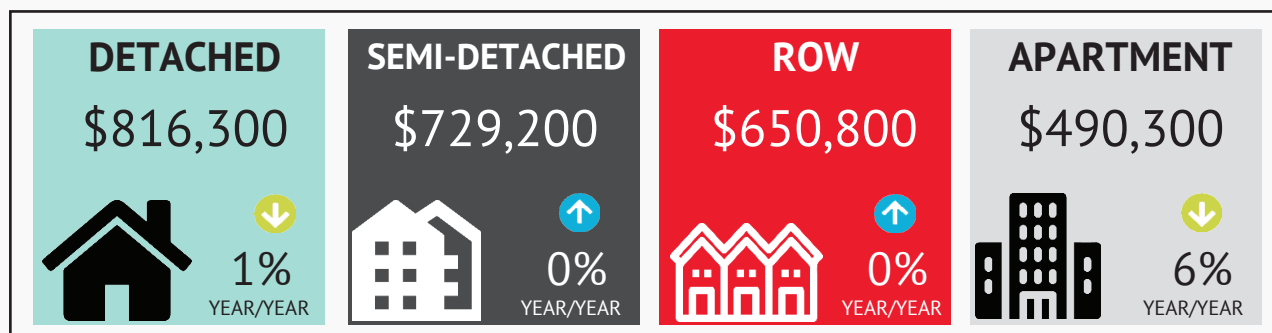

New listings increased across most property types in October. The one exception was the semi-detached sector, where new listings remain lower than both last year's levels and longer-term trends. The rise in new listings compared to sales caused the sales to new listings ratio to range from a low of 29 per cent in the apartment sector to 37 per cent in the Semi-detached sector.

The recent gain in supply has provided more choices to prospective homebuyers. Increased supply is weighing on home prices across all property types. Detached, Semi-detached and Row properties all reported an unadjusted monthly benchmark price decline that exceeded three per cent. However, prices generally remained in line with levels reported last year. Apartment condominium benchmark prices reported a smaller monthly decline of less than one per cent but are still more than six per cent lower than levels reported last October.
